

Relationship with self

- (A) Anxiety
- (B) Explosive anger
- (C) Impulsive anger
- (D) Depression
- (E) Academic self-esteem
- (F) Social self-esteem
- (G) Relationship with self at home

Relationship with adults

- (M) Attention-seeking from adults
- (N) Defiance towards adults
- (O) Over-dependence on adults
- (P) Being hurtful towards adults
- (Q) Relationship with adults at home

Relationship with peers

- (H) Friendship deficit
- (I) Instrumental aggression
- (J) Attention-seeking from peers
- (K) Being hurtful towards peers
- (L) Relationship with other children / young people at home

Key

From the What I Feel Questionnaire

From the At Home Questionnaire

Areas of strength and weakness

Below are listed Azim's strongest areas, and the 3 areas in which he could most improve.

Principal strengths

SNAP-Behaviour suggests that Azim has strength in:

- Responding to challenge, which means that he can manage frustrations and use problem-solving skills, instead of aggression, when faced with challenges.
- Reacting towards adults, which means that he is cooperative and helpful with adults and accepts directions and reprimands from them calmly.
- Attitudes towards adults, which means that he is respectful and can maintain positive relationships with adults, and can accept being corrected.

Principal weaknesses

SNAP-Behaviour suggests that Azim's learning might be affected by:

- Poor relationship with self at home, which means that he may suffer with self-doubts about his abilities and does not believe he can improve things through his own efforts.
- Anxiety, which means that he will quickly give up or run away from situations with which he cannot cope. He may try to over-control situations in order to avoid anxiety.
- Depression, which means that he may seem lethargic and lack motivation when faced with new learning challenges. Azim's concentration may be poor and he will have a tendency to blame outside factors for his difficulties. He will not believe that he can make things better.